READY FOR THE VEIL.

THE R. E. LEE STATUE NOW ON THE PEDESTAL.

Work Preparatory to the Ceremonics of the 29th Nearly Completed—Large Delegations From the North as Well as the South Expected.

Yesterday Mr. Cole jacked the statue and the pistform over on top the pedestal. He met with very little difficulty in the under taking, and yesterday intermoon he began building pens to support braces to lift the statue. These braces will go under the body of the horse, the part touching the boronze being padded. The pens will support either end of the braces, and the horse will be raised by these braces until the platform on which it is now resting can be gotwill be raised by these braces until the platform on which it is now resting can be gotten from under it. As soon as this is done, the statue will be lowered on the bronze, and by 40'clock Saturday evening the statue will stand upon its last resting place.

IRON RIBBONS. Before the staging now around the statue is taken down, four iron ribbons will be put, two on either side, and bolted to the granite. This will give additional security, and will prevent any apprehension that the statue can, by any means, be toppled over.

As soon as, Mr. Cole finishes with the statue a white veil will be put around it. Late Saturday night or early Monday morning it will be partially unveiled to see if the string works. The men employed on the statue will also be in attendance on the 29th, so that if from any possible way the veil should hang, they could at once use ladders and pully the eli off. It is not the least probable that there will be any hitch, but Mr. Cole wishes to provide against any contingency, hence the men and ladders. THE WHITE VEIL. THE CEREMONIES.

THE CEREMONIES.

The ceremonies of the unveiling have not been decided on fully as yet. This will be done by the Lee statue board in a day or so. The timber that has been used to get the statue on the pedestal, when taken down will be used for seats. The grand and speaker's stands are finished, as is also the stand at the southwest corner of Lombardy and Franklin. Another stand is in course of erection at the southeast corner, and will be finished in a few days.
